We are nearly at the time for Spring Break when we will all enjoy time to rest and recharge. Spring Break is the week of March 26-30. Then it is back to work to finish this year strong. We have much to do, and as always, your support is needed.

As we work our way to the end of the school year, we once again are involved in testing and assessing our students' academic growth. Our students just finished the first part of ISTEP+. The second window for the state assessment begins April 16. While there are so many flaws and frustrations with our high-stake testing format and procedures, these tests were designed to track academic progress for the benefit of your child—if teachers know what areas need work, they can better help each individual in the classroom. It is important to know that the growth and progress of your child is the most valuable take-away from the test.

So many exciting things and successes are happening at NJ-SP. Our high school drama department just finished an outstanding musical performance. Our Elementary and Jr-Sr High School academic teams have competed and will compete in several competitions. Our winter athletic teams experienced positive seasons. Our capital projects will soon start, as we strive to maintain a facility that is conducive to learning.

As we enjoy and appreciate the positive events going on in our school corporation, let us continue to strive for excellence. We still have so much more to work towards. The ever-changing school accountability formula means we need to be prepared for constant adjustments. May the energy that comes with the spring season, help us all as we finish another school year.
